Taz 3.0 out of 5 stars To be fair, I am using it to punch and bind 80lb doublesided matte photo paper that I am making calendars out of. Its supposed to handle 10 sheets of 20lb paper which is 200lb in thickness so it shouldnt be a problem. However, the paper keeps sticking when I try to get it in place for punching and the holes end up getting punched out of alignment.<http://nkino.ru/upload/car-dolly-manual.xml>

Of course, that means I have to reprint the doublesided page and start over. Binding with the combs is easy, but I would not recommend this machine to anyone trying to punch thick paper or more than 34 sheets of regular paper at a time.And truthfully, it does not punch that many papers all at once. But for home use, its incredibly sturdy and I dont think its flimsy or inferior at all. Besides being wellmade, it is such a useful machine. Love this machine, its one of my favorite devices in the entire house.It works best with 1 to 3 pices of paper. If you have never used this type of a binding machine, be prepared to spend some time on each job. First you have to carefully stack the papers so the left edges are all even. Then you have to punch holes in 1 to 3 pieces of paper at a time. When this is done, then you have to use the machine to open the plastic comb and carefully place each piece of paper on all of the open fingers. I bought this machine for home use to help bind various sets of papers such as tax returns. The C75 worked well in peforming this function, but extra time was needed to punch the required holes. At this price it is a good piece of equipment if is durable enough to last a while. If you are doing lots of comb binding, this machine is probably too slow and light weight.Its supposed to cut 10 pages of plain paper at a time, which I figured meant 3 or 4. However, if the paper is fresh out of the package, it will indeed cut 10 at a time. The problem with used paper say, paper thats been through the copy machine is that the edges tend to curl a bit, and that makes it hard to get all that paper into the slot on the machine. But if you can get the paper into the slot, it will cut it. The unit has suction cups on the bottom which I didnt expect and they keep it from tilting up or sliding around when you apply downward force on the handle. Its solidly made, and should last quite awhile with reasonable treatment.<http://www.buildonhope.org/car-electrical-wiring-manual.xml>

The binding section is simple and mechanical, and doesn't work as well as I'd hoped, but I don't think any other machine would do better. The problem is that the tight curl on the plastic spines make it hard to get them through the entire stack of paper. The cutting is done on the flat surface like a large 3-hole punch, and the binding is done on the top where you see those metal spikes sticking up in the picture. It's not a particularly fast operation that way, but, for the price, I think it's a good deal. Yes, you can only punch about 5 sheets at a time, as others mentioned this is a personal binder, meaning low volume, creating the occasional bound document. If you want to work quicker, you'll need to spend big bucks. To bind, simply punch your paper, then place the comb on the teeth of the binder, line up the little hook things, gently pull the handle down to open the comb, position your paper, release the handle and you're done. Unit is small and light making it easy to transport. The well designed waste tray is easy to empty. The binder in general is very easy to keep clean and store. I wanted something that I could easily store over, under or between something. This was not it. So I returned it. However, this works very well for home use. I suspect it would work just as well in a small office. It's very easy to use. It takes some technique to operate the binding part. The that is no biggie. In order to navigate out of this carousel please use your heading shortcut key to navigate to the next or previous heading. Bind books, reports, presentations and other documents. Its compact size allows you to conveniently transport it from one location to another, and the lightweight design fits easily on any desk. The CombBind C75 is capable of punching up to 10 sheets of paper at a time and can bind a book up to 125 pages thick 20 lb paper. A comb selection guide allows easy selection of the correct size plastic comb.
